Triptych Party II: A-List Cannibal Cage-match

In collaboration with You3b.com

Â

Today anyone can be a star. The famous, the infamous and the everyday Vlog webstars are here today and possibly gone tomorrow. Andy's 15 minutes of fame now barely last 30 seconds and the YouTube phenomena creates instant fame to be quickly replaced by the next lunchtime sensation or overnight international viral hit by a 5 year old kid from Nebraska named Fred.

Through a process of performative appropriation and the over-sized projection of three simultaneous video streams on the gallery wall, Artists Meeting spins YouTube videos into triptychs using the unique features of You3b.com and the process of "digital wandering" or "drifting" through the parallel universe of public online video. While formally simple, the effect of presenting videos normally consumed privately by individuals in this public setting creates an uncanny, unsettling and sometimes hilarious effect on the viewers through the looping sequences, overlapping sounds and beautifully awkward combinations of artworks created by amateur and professional video makers.

You3b is a tool that allows users to make triptychs out of YouTube videos. An Eyebeam project conceived by Jeff Crouse, produced by Jeff Crouse and Andrew Mahon and designed and coded by Andrew Mahon. <http://www.you3b.com> Â Â

For the installation at Postmasters Lee Wells curated/created two projections of people staring and a third projection of crowd scenes. This escalated the environment and created a sense of the ambient crowd as both the viewers and the viewed. -- G.H. Hovagimyan

Here's the list of YTTP links for a DIY event: List is lovingly compiled by James Andrews of all the Artists Meeting members triptychs.Â
